How we use cookies and similar technologies

Cookies are small pieces of text sent to your web browser by a website you visit. A cookie file is stored in your web browser and allows us to recognise you and make your next visit easier and the service more useful to you. Similar technologies include web beacons, action tags, local shared objects ('flash cookies') and single pixel gifs; such technologies can be used to track users' actions and activities, and to store information about them.

We use these cookies and/or similar technologies on this website for analysing web traffic or let you know when you visit a particular site. Cookies allow web applications to respond to you as an individual. The web application can tailor its operations to your needs, likes and dislikes by gathering and remembering information about your preferences.

We use traffic log cookies to identify which pages are being used. This helps us analyse data about web page traffic and improve our website to tailor it to customer needs. We only use this information for statistical analysis purposes and then the data is removed from the system.

Overall, cookies help us provide you with a better website, by enabling us to monitor which pages you find useful and which you do not. A cookie in no way gives us access to your computer or any information about you, other than the data you choose to share with us.

In most cases we will need your consent to use cookies on our website. The exception is where the cookie is essential for us to provide you with a service you have requested, or essential to the inherent functionality of the website. If you visit our website when your browser is set to accept cookies, we will interpret this as an indication that you consent to our use of cookies and other similar technologies as described in this Privacy Policy Statement. If you change your mind in the future about letting us use cookies, you can modify the settings of your browser to reject cookies or disable cookies completely, however this may prevent you from taking full advantage of the website.
